

Bayes' theorem is extremely important, because the probability of group membership is written in terms of distributions that can be evaluated on the basis of data. It can be used to derive decision rules that are optimum for fairly broad classes of optimum criteria. Even when the necessary data cannot be obtained, Bayes' rule will define the limiting performance that any suboptimal decision rule can attain.