

Computational definition of gradient is simply application of the Taylor's series applied in this discrete domain. It has been defined in terms of both spatial filtering (2-D convolution with 3×3 masks) and row and column convolution. Size of the matrix determines the threshold of efficiency of each choice. Row and column convolution is chosen to use parallel operations where as spatial convolution is used when parallelization is not necessary.